

Fentyshia L. Daniels, LMSW

Title: Counselor

Education: Bachelors of Arts, University of Bridgeport
Masters of Social Work, Adelphi University

Professional Interest:

To help students enhance personal well-being through therapeutic support.
Providing support and intervention.
Working with community partners to assist in supporting students.
Collaboration with Faculty and Staff on how to support the student body.

Approach to Counseling:

As a Counselor, I am prepared to use a variety of treatment modalities to successfully provide counseling services and coordinate community resources. I will also provide support helping students address disruptions that impede on their functioning and wellbeing to reach and achieve their educational goals. As a Master level practitioner, I will assist students by providing high-quality counseling supports, clinical case management and therapeutic services.

Myer Briggs Identifies: Advocate Personality (INFJ-A/INFJ-T)

Advocates are a rare personality, but they leave a mark on the world. They have a deep sense of idealism and integrity, but they aren't idle dreamers- they take concrete steps to realize their goals and make lasting impact. Advocates strive to do what's right so they can help create a better world. Advocates see helping others as their purpose in life. They are troubled by injustice, and aspire to fix society's deeper problems, in the hope that unfairness and hardship can become things of the past. Advocates tend to thrive when they have opportunities to express their creativity and insight, and they're especially motivated when they know that what they're doing has meaning.
